Fragments of a scientific discourse

What is love? As we continue to explore this emotion that embraces us all one day or another, we think we know it by heart and through our hearts. But what is really going on? This exhibition offers an opportunity towards a series of approaches and explorations that can explain or at least shed light on any experience of love.

The exhibition targets one of our vital needs, attachment. It deciphers the latest research from the field of emotional sciences to provide insights for 15/25-year olds on the development of sexual identity, consent, the notion of “normality” or even empathy. New forms of attachment, disrupted by the Internet and social networks, are also widely discussed, as is sexuality as an expression of love.

HIGHLIGHTS

An exciting investigation into the land of emotions related to love through:

- 👁 The bric-a-brac of attachments in the attachment gallery
- 👁 The sciences of love in the gallery of experiences
